

What you need to know about driving with pets and auto insurance

It's not unusual to spot a dog's head or nose sticking out of the window of a passing car – having the wind blow through their fur and taking in all sorts of scents. It can be an exhilarating experience, and it's no wonder they enjoy it.

On the other hand, a driver caught with a dog in their lap may be in for an expensive surprise. According to the Ontario Provincial Police, there isn't a specific charge for having a dog in your lap, but it could be considered a crowding the driver's seat charge.
